

Transitioning to Digital Government in 2022

Rising expectations, uncertainty and disruption have placed more pressure on governments to advance their transition to digital government. This infographic captures how governments plan to transition and what it all means for government CIOs.

Many governments struggle to move beyond optimization into transformation.

Only 24% are working on transformation-focused activities

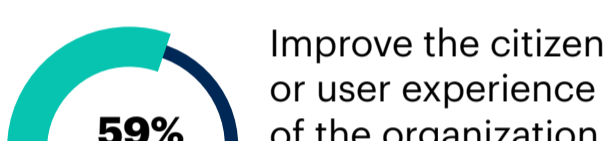

75% of budget is going to running and optimizing existing solutions

There is a direct correlation between governments that have a diversified digital program that includes both optimization and transformation initiatives and successfully scaling the benefits of digital across the organization.

Even during this time of disruption, governments share common digital government objectives and challenges.

Objectives

Challenges

Government CIOs must focus business executives on these objectives and proactively build mitigation strategies for these challenges.

While business leaders take the lead on strategy, they expect CIOs to deliver.

Roles Key to the Success of Digital Government

CIOs need to ensure ongoing executive leadership and ownership, throughout delivery, for the digital transformation to positively impact business mission.

There are key technologies and practices supporting the move from optimization to transformation.

Have already deployed or plan to deploy in the next 3 years

59% have a significant or somewhat significant dependence on data, APIs, services or digital platforms adopted from other government organizations or departments

Have already adopted or plan to adopt in the next 3 years

Modernize your practices and prioritize which emerging technologies are critical for supporting the scaling of digital across the organization.

→ Reach out to learn more about using the Digital Government Maturity Model to accelerate your transformation.